Project name *

e.g. VIP onboarding redesign at Guardio

Where did you do it *

Company / internship work

What you built *

1–2 sentences. What's the project, what's it for, what did you specifically do.

e.g. Rewrote our VIP onboarding from a 4-step manual handoff to a self-serve guided tour. Designed with our CS lead, prototyped in Notion, built with engineering.

Specific outcome *

Number, metric, what shipped, what changed. The post leads with this — make it concrete.

e.g. Cut average onboarding from 8 days to 3, and our VIP cohort hit 88% feature adoption in their first quarter.

Portfolio / demo link

Optional. Adds a 'see the work' destination at the end.

Heads-up: Observation posts are the highest-risk format for early-career accounts. Without a concrete specific example anchoring your authority, this post will read as overreach. The framework requires you to provide one.

The trend *

What's happening in your target industry/space. Concrete, not vague.

e.g. CS leaders in B2B SaaS are quietly de-emphasizing CSAT in favor of feature-adoption rate.

Specific example you directly saw or did *

The load-bearing field. Without it, the post reads as posturing. Names, numbers, places where appropriate.

e.g. At my Guardio internship, my CS lead pushed me to track adoption-rate-per-VIP-cohort rather than CSAT. Within Q1 we caught two retention risks earlier than CSAT would have surfaced.

Your take *

The actual opinion, grounded in the example. Conviction is welcome; a hot take untethered from the example is not.

e.g. CSAT measures how customers feel about a single interaction; adoption-rate measures whether they'll renew. The latter is leading; the former is lagging.

Three months into owning onboarding, I learned the fastest way to cut churn wasn't a new feature — it was a two-line setup checklist.

We'd been blaming the product. The data said otherwise: the users who finished setup in week one stayed. So we made finishing unavoidable, and that cohort's churn dropped.

The lesson I keep coming back to: the problem usually isn't the thing everyone's pointing at.
