Pick the kind of outreach you're starting. The AI applies a different framework per goal — recruiters get directness, dormant connections get warm reconnection first, referral asks get warm-up coaching when the relationship isn't strong enough.

INTERNSHIP

Propose an internship

For an UNPOSTED internship in a target function. Value-forward proposal to the function lead, not 'are you hiring?'

JOB SEARCH

Message a recruiter

Highest-reply-rate target (~12%) — direct ask in turn 1 is appropriate

Lower reply rate (~6%); learning-conversation framing beats 'are you hiring?'

Ask for a referral

Strong relationships → direct ask. Dormant relationships → reconnect first, ask in turn 2-3

NETWORK

Message an alumni

Shared school affiliation activates social capital; specific ask wanted

Request an informational interview

20-30 min learning conversation; come with 2-3 specific questions

Reconnect with a dormant connection

No ask in turn 1. Pure reconnection; ask comes later if needed

Thanks, Maya! If it'd be useful, one thing I could dig into is your week-one activation. I owned onboarding at Guardio and cut first-week churn with a simple setup checklist — so I'd be glad to look at where new Monday teams drop off early on, and share a short writeup either way.

Three months into owning CS at a small SaaS — the most counterintuitive lesson is that activation completion rate is a better leading indicator of retention than CSAT. CSAT measures how the customer felt about one interaction; activation measures whether they'll come back.

OPTION 1

Echo + concrete add

Sarah — this matches what I saw at Guardio. We tracked CSAT for 18 months before noticing it lagged adoption-rate by ~3 weeks. The win was switching the early-warning dashboard to adoption-per-VIP-cohort; we caught two retention risks earlier than CSAT would have. One nuance: the threshold for 'activated' matters more than the metric itself — we re-tightened ours twice in the first quarter.

 Copy

OPTION 2

52 words

Question the bar

Curious how you're defining 'activated' for this — is it tied to a specific feature usage count, an in-app event, or a time-based threshold (e.g. 7-day usage frequency)? At Guardio we initially used login-frequency and got false positives; switching to feature-completion gave a cleaner predictive signal but took two months to backfill.

 Copy

OPTION 3

56 words

Counterexample

Agree on activation as the leading indicator most of the time, but with one wrinkle: for very long sales cycles (enterprise B2B) activation can lag the deal economics by months. CSAT during the proof-of-concept phase tracked closer to renewal for us than first-month activation did. Activation became the right metric only after the first contract anniversary.
