Tracks check-in

I've been getting more excited about analytics than product management lately. Should I rethink my tracks?

That's a meaningful signal. Based on what you've said and the work you've actually shipped at Guardio (the activation-funnel work), here's how I'd adjust your roadmap:

Proposed roadmap changes

Move Product Analyst → Track 1 — Your Move — stronger pull + clearer evidence chain through Guardio analytics work

Move Associate Product Manager → Track 2 — Plan B — still viable as Plan B, but secondary to analytics now

Add Growth Analyst as Track 1 — Your Move — adjacent target with high overlap to Product Analyst skill set

🗨 Riverside follow-up ▾

I had my first interview with Riverside yesterday — went well, moving to round 2 next week.

• Good news! Let me update your tracker so the calendar surfaces this and you keep momentum:

📦 Proposed application changes

Update Riverside — Product Analyst: status → interviewing, stage → round_2_scheduled

Add Lightricks — Product Analyst Intern (interested)

Internship targets

I've been thinking about pitching myself for a customer success internship at monday.com — they have alumni from Reichman.

That's a sharp pick — monday.com matches your stated goal and the Reichman alumni network is a real bridge. Let me add it to your pipeline:

Guardio onboarding st... ▾

I just wrapped a project at Guardio — I cut first-week churn by building a two-line setup checklist for onboarding. The data showed users who finished setup in week one stayed; we made finishing unavoidable, and that cohort's churn dropped from 31% to 14%.

That's a strong, concrete story — exactly the kind that wins PM interviews. The before/after numbers (31% → 14%) and the mechanism (making setup unavoidable rather than blaming the product) are gold. Want me to save it to your Story Bank, structured?
